Safe Connections

A neutral child-exchange process for disputing parents.

Safe Connections

A safe place, a safe process

Safe Connections provides a neutral exchange site with a third party who acts as the “go-between” from one parent to the other.

Safe connections offers help for

- children who are experiencing separation from one parent
- non-custodial parents who wish to increase visitation with their children, and
- parents who wish to improve communication with each other in the best interest of their children.

What types of services are provided?

Safe Connections provides the following services:

- Neutral drop-off and pick-up sites,
- Mediation services,
- Visitation counseling,
- Supplemental services through other Bethany programs, and
- Referrals to other community resources.

Supplemental services include:

- Counseling to address the emotional and psychological issues that come with separation or divorce,
- Development of parenting skills
- Awareness of child development stages, and
- Development of appropriate parent-child boundaries.

How it works:

On the Friday of an exchange weekend, the custodial parent brings the child/ren to the exchange location so the parents do not have contact with each other. A staff person walks the child/ren to the non-custodial parent (who arrived 15 minutes earlier than the custodial parent) and is waiting in another location in the building.

The child/ren and the non-custodial parent leave ten minutes after the custodial parent has departed the exchange site. At no time during the exchange do parents have contact with each other. Further, the start and departure times ensure no contact between them.

The process is reversed on the Sunday of an exchange weekend as child/ren are returned to the custodial parent’s care.

Benefits

Safe Connections provides parents with crucial tools that can help them deal with each other and with their children.

Through education and skill building, parents are able to understand and appreciate the emotional turmoil a child undergoes during a custody dispute.

This service helps both of the parents and the child form relational bonds which can be lost in a custody battle or in conflictual exchanges.

Children cope better with the emotional aspect of separation and divorce if they are able to maintain contact with both parents, and parents are able to provide more emotional support.
